

Spontaneous Superficial Arteriovenous Malformation causing Pulsatile Tinnitus: A Case Report

Holt Walters¹, Sara Drever², Alaa Abdelgalil², and Andrew Robson²

¹Sunderland Royal Hospital

²Cumberland Infirmary

October 31, 2020

Abstract

Arteriovenous fistulae (AVF) of the head and neck region are extremely rare, especially those that occur spontaneously. We present the case of a 58 year old female with a spontaneous postauricular AVF causing troublesome pulsatile tinnitus. In this case a simple surgical procedure completely cured the patient of her symptoms.

Hosted file

Spontaneous_Superficial_Arteriovenous_Malformation_causing_Pulsatile_Tinnitus_V5.pdf available at <https://authorea.com/users/371778/articles/490003-spontaneous-superficial-arteriovenous-malformation-causing-pulsatile-tinnitus-a-case-report>

